

Sources of Poultry and Supplies For Small Flocks - 2004

prepared by
Dr. Nickolas Zimmermann
Animal and Avian Sciences Department
University of Maryland

The commercial sources of poultry, eggs, and chicks listed are from Pullorum-Typhoid Clean Breeder Flocks listed as commercial hatcheries. The suppliers also meet state and federal sanitation requirements. This list is provided to small flock owners as a partial source and does not represent an endorsement, or recommendation, of the individuals or firms by the University of Maryland or states and universities providing this list to you. This list provides names and addresses of sources of equipment and supplies not normally sold in feed stores.

REMEMBER, the danger of entry of contagious diseases such as Pullorum-Typhoid and Avian Influenza into your flock or state is a real threat. You must do your part as a small flock owner to practice good management and health programs to prevent the spread of diseases into other small or commercial flocks. It is important that you follow recommendations put out by state universities, state and federal government agencies and poultry organizations. Well-managed birds will also be more productive.

Contact your county Cooperative Extension agent listed under the county listing in your phone book for education materials on small flock health and management. There is an adequate supply of written, slide-tape and video educational materials available. An excellent source is MEP 300, Raising Your Home Flock, which is available from your County Agent or on-line at <http://www.agnr.umd.edu/MCE/Publications/Publication.cfm?ID=323&cat=C>.
